In this month’s Bulletin

In the editorial section, Philipe de Souto Barreto (390) asks why physical activity is not more effectively promoted as a health promotion measure. Bernard Burnand (391) explains the value of independent advice to doctors on prescription medicines. In the news section, Dale Gavlak (394–395) reports on how United Nations agencies are helping the government respond to the needs of half a million Syrian refugees sheltering in Jordan. Fiona Fleck interviews Roy Shore (396–397) about the lessons learnt in risk communication from Fukushima.

Women in the workplace
Jody Heymann et al. (398–406) compare breastfeeding policies worldwide.

Who is studying what, where?
Roderik F Viergever et al. (416–425) analyse WHO's clinical trial registry.

Every child counts
Sonja Fagernäs & Joyce Odame (459–464) assess a birth registration campaign.

Down the microscope
Pierre Mukadi et al. (441–448) assess how well laboratories diagnose malaria and sleeping sickness.

Paying doctors’ bills
Md Mizanur Rahman et al. (449–458) study how households cope with health-care costs.

Engaging mothers
Swati Sarbani Roy et al. (426–433) look at neonatal survival following community mobilization with women’s groups.

The price of high blood sugar
Roberta Arnoldi Cobas et al. (434–440) measure the costs of diabetes.

Namibia & Rwanda
Hapsatou Touré et al. (407–415) count the costs of eliminating paediatric HIV.

Bangladesh
Md Mizanur Rahman et al. (449–458) study how households cope with health-care costs.

Democratic Republic of the Congo
Pierre Mukadi et al. (441–448) assess how well laboratories diagnose malaria and sleeping sickness.

India
Swati Sarbani Roy et al. (426–433) look at neonatal survival following community mobilization with women’s groups.

Brazil
Roberta Arnoldi Cobas et al. (434–440) measure the costs of diabetes.

Ghana
Sonja Fagernäs & Joyce Odame (459–464) assess a birth registration campaign.